1. To understand the health status of students, early detect abnormalities and diseases, enhance student health, protect the health of campus faculty, staff, and students, prevent campus infectious diseases, and maintain public health safety, the Guidelines have been established according to the 'School Health Act' and 'Student Health Implementation Methods'.
2. New students (including transfer students) are required to undergo a health examination upon admission. Undergraduate new students should submit a medical examination report conducted by the affiliated Chung-Ho Memorial Hospital of the Kaohsiung Medical University. New graduate (Master's and Doctoral) students may submit a medical examination report from a qualified medical institution within three months before the first day of classes. If necessary, a full or partial health examination may be conducted for all or some students.
New overseas students must undergo a health examination upon admission, in addition to the student health check, they should also follow the health examination items stipulated by the central health authorities.
3. New students must complete the health examination within the specified period and submit the health examination report to the Division of Health Service. Students who fail to complete the examination as required are considered not to have completed the admission process.
Students who take a leave of absence or reserve their enrollment status without completing the health examination must complete it upon resumption of studies.
4. The Division of Health Service will record and statistically analyze the results of student physical examinations, tracking and counseling those with abnormalities or diseases, and notifying relevant units.
5. Abnormalities or diseases found during the student health examination will be managed by the Division of Health Service and related personnel, urging prompt correction and follow-up.
6. Students with open infectious diseases will be reported by the Division of Health Service to relevant units for discussion of response measures.
7. All students of the school must comply with and cooperate with infectious disease prevention policies and plans set by the central competent authorities, including vaccination, infectious disease prevention, epidemic surveillance, reporting, investigation, testing, handling, and training measures.
8. The Guidelines, once reviewed and passed by the Student Affairs Meeting will be implemented from the date of announcement, and the same applies to any amendments."
